

HiQ builds new website for The Swedish Data Protection Authority

HiQ wins assignment to develop and administrate the new website for the Swedish Data Protection Authority.

"We are so glad to get this assignment that will contribute to a higher service level for the Data Protection Authority's target groups. It is fully in line with our ongoing work to make people's lives easier through digital solutions," says Lars Stugemo, President and CEO of HiQ.

After a call-off order of Kammarkollegiet's framework agreement for the provision of information, the Swedish Data Protection Authority has granted HiQ the assignment for maintenance and development of its website. HiQ's experienced consultants and wide expertise from similar assignments were mentioned when the assignment was awarded, together with reference assignments that reflect good availability and an appealing structure and design.

The Swedish Data Protection Authority is one of many authorities who have turned to HiQ for help with development of their websites. HiQ has worked with several authorities, municipalities and public administrations, and has significant experience in building accessible, easily navigable websites for the public sector.

"We have worked with several public websites, so we have become experts more or less on websites for the public sector. And our experience in information-dense websites with high requirements on accessibility is an important asset in this assignment," says Anders Nilsson, Managing Director of HiQ Mälardalen.

The Swedish Data Protection Authority is changing its name to the Swedish Authority for Integrity Protection on 1 January 2021.
